The Words Are the Gift

A studio that turns one messy paragraph about someone you love into a letter, a card, and a cake topper made only for them.

PROJECT

Letter Studio

FORMAT

Web, five minutes

STATUS

Working prototype

THE PROBLEM

The card industry solved the outside.
Nobody solved the inside.

Foil, letterpress, a thousand designs for every occasion — and then a blank rectangle and a pen.

Nobody keeps a card because the foil was nice. They keep it for what was written there. So we write four safe words, or we buy a stranger's words already printed inside.

WHAT IT MAKES

You tell it about the person. It gives back three things.

words

The letter

Written from your details — the kitchen, the inside joke — not from a template. A first draft you are meant to edit.

paper

The card

A 5 × 7 front built to match what the letter turned out to be about. Exact colours, ready for a print shop.

the day

The topper

Cut lettering on a single pick. In Korea the topper is the thing in every photograph from that day.

One story decides all three, so a quiet, grateful letter never arrives on a card covered in confetti.

IN WOOD

The same words, cut into something that stays.

one die

The stamp

One oval stamp carries the whole message — the greeting, the date, the signature. Every card, envelope and tag that day is marked by the same hand.

one wall

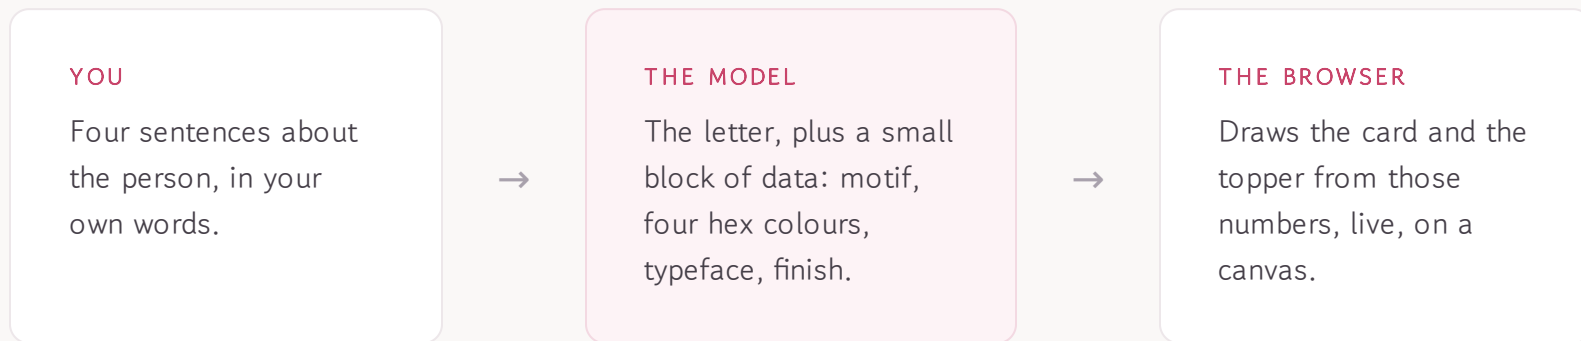

The keepsake

The same lines split across stacked slats, hung in the room where the day happened. The message stops being a card and becomes the object.

First draft in maple. Next: a maker, a real cutting file, and one price for the set.

HOW IT WORKS

The model never draws. It only decides.

That split is why the output is always on brand, why redrawing is instant and free, and why what comes out is a specification a maker can work from — not a picture.

WHAT'S NEXT

The unglamorous part.

01 Find a maker for the wood pieces

Maple and birch, laser engraving, samples first

02 Price the card, the stamp and the keepsake together

One order, one delivery, one number

03 Put it in front of people who are not my friends

Ten strangers, real occasions, watch where they stop

I am not replacing the person writing the card. You were the one in that kitchen — the studio just makes sure you never mail stay healthy again.
